Sustainable Rural & Remote Primary Health Care Models in Australia

Dr. John Humphreys

Professor of Rural Health Research
School of Rural Health
Monash University Bendigo

Dr. John Wakerman

Director
Centre for Remote Health
Alice Springs, Northern Territory, Australia

Dr. John Humphreys is Professor of Rural Health Research in the School of Rural Health at Monash University Bendigo. John is well known for his academic expertise and research on health service provision in rural and remote areas of Australia, rural workforce recruitment and retention, rural health policy and the evaluation of rural health programs. He has undertaken extensive fieldwork on rural health issues throughout rural and remote regions of Queensland, New South Wales and Victoria, and has published widely in books and journals. In addition to his academic career, John has worked in both the Victorian and the Commonwealth Departments of Health. John has taken a lead role in developing National Rural Health Policies and is currently a member of several Advisory Committees for the Commonwealth Department of Health and Aged Care.

Dr. John Wakerman is the Director of the Centre for Remote Health with a background in the provision of remote primary health care services, both as a medical practitioner and senior manager. He is a Public Health medicine specialist with a special interest in remote health systems research and management education and has had considerable international experience as a public health and health service management consultant. He also works as a General Practitioner in Alice Springs.
